

Christoph Ebell is a science diplomat, technology consultant and transformation strategist. He was born in Bern in 1972. He first studied physics, then changed to the humanities and graduated in Bern and Chicago. After a research stay in Cambridge (USA), he worked for the Swiss government's innovation agency CTI, then for the Swiss Interior, Economy, and Foreign Affairs Departments and was transferred to head the Science Section at the Swiss Embassy in Washington, D.C. Back in Switzerland, he worked in Geneva at the Human Brain Project, a multidisciplinary EU project in computer-based brain research and the largest of its kind in Europe, for the last three years as its Executive Director. Since 2018 Chris Ebell has established a consulting firm for technology projects and venture capital. He has two daughters and lives in a wine-growing village near Geneva.
